Playing on Broken Strings by Frances M. Tate

Commander Gerald Rathbone has unusual beliefs for a man in his position. He believes it's easier to 'turn' a detective than train a vampire to be a policeman. He believes The Greater Good is always the best option and he believes the man he murdered 3 days ago should be brimming with gratitude.

Detective Daniel Harvey (deceased) believes otherwise.

Cello believes she should've killed Rathbone the first time he tried to use her friends as leverage. She was the vampire but he was the monster... Now that Harvey's a vampire Rathbone believes his long wait for immortality is almost over. So does Cello... just not for the same reason.
